

St. Xavier, Montana

Located on the rolling prairie of Southeastern Montana, St. Xavier is a small community on the Crow Indian Reservation with a population of less than 100. This remote community is 20 miles south of Crow Agency, the hub of the Crow Indian Reservation, and near Little Bighorn Battlefield making the area rich in native culture and national history. In addition to culture, nearby Bighorn Canyon offers opportunities to explore the scenic area through biking, hiking and other recreational activities. Throughout history, Montana's allure was resource extraction and exploitation: furs and gold, then industrial, rail, coal and agricultural development. Today, half of Montana's population lives outside of its cities. St. Xavier's appeal is its claim to be the "last best place" - it is accessible and open, you can have an impact, people are friendly, life is slower and the sky is big. St. Xavier is remote, stark and beautiful.
